PROPERTY OWNER ART SHOW: ARTIST HIGHLIGHT

The Property Owner Art Show is now open at Charrette Creek Commons! See page 4 for hours of operation.

Most of Robert Michelmann's work is made of metal. Some of it is functional, some are made to provoke thought and others are an attempt to create beauty. These boxes engage the viewer to look at them, peer into and through them, then focus on the scene beyond. Ext. 9213.

HOUSE FINCH INVASION

Batten down the hatches and fill the bird feeder — here come the house finches! Unknown to the Midwest a few decades ago, these small, reddish finches are populating our cities, suburbs and farms. No birds have made such a complete invasion since the starling did many years earlier.

The spread of the house finch has been due to people. In the early 1940s, house finches were imported from California and sold in New York City as caged birds called "Hollywood" finches. Somehow, some became free. From Long Island they began expanding westward, arriving in St. Louis in 1981. By 1990, they had spread across Missouri, Iowa and eastern Kansas.

Most people welcome house finches. They are pretty and have an energetic, musical, twittering warble. House finches apparently don't compete with our native birds at Innsbrook. They seem to have found their own niche, and it's obvious they're here to stay!
