Bluebird Trail Report

Our Innsbrook bluebirds now have 70 active nests. They contain 81 eggs and 159 chicks - 131 more chicks have fledged over the past week, keeping the daddy bluebirds very busy (they usually stay with the chicks for their first two-three weeks).

Our bluebirds have some fierce competition from English house sparrows. The sparrows are not a native species but were brought here in the 1850's. They quickly spread across the country. They are very aggressive and will attack and kill bluebird adults, chicks, and eggs because they want the nest boxes for their nests. You can recognize the male sparrow by his gray and chestnut head and large black spot on his chest. They make a very messy nest from grasses, feathers and assorted litter. The eggs are white or greenish and speckled with brown. Because they are not a native species, it is legal to remove and destroy their nests (eggs and all). You should do this immediately if they take over your nestbox.

Please send your questions and/or reports to Shirley at saritsema@gmail.com.

Mother nature blessed us with a glorious weather day for our annual Discovery Day Open House last Saturday, May 11. A special thanks to all of the many volunteers who helped make this event happen. Whether listening to the porch music, enjoying a hot dog, or learning from the artisans demonstrating their skills, a good time was had by all. Thanks to everyone for attending this year's Discovery Day.

Our barn reconstruction is at the point where roof rafters are being installed. It's difficult work which demands patience and careful planning. While not everyone can be "hands on," we'd love to have you as a supporter. We've already incurred significant costs in the rebuilding. The concrete work, as well as the "to be installed" roof, are just a couple of items we didn't wish to have our volunteer crew tackle. If you're not yet a member of the Historical Society, we'd love to have you join our ranks. Simply go to www.innsbrookhistoricalsociety.org. If you have questions about the IHS, don't hesitate to call Dave at 314.704.7001.

NATURE NOTES

Buffleheads: Must See Nature

There's an old saying about taking to water like a duck. Buffleheads take that saying to the limit with rapid flight and stealthy dives. If you take yourself near open waters this time of year, you may be able to see the show. Some were recently seen at Founain Grove and Riverlands. These diving ducks have been around for eons and have classic black and white features. Both males and females have large heads that stick out with a white patch. Males sport metallic greens and purples around their head. This iridescence is easier to see outside of the high contrast sunshine in the middle of the day.

Flying and Diving

Unlike other diving ducks that run across the water to take flight, buffleheads can become airborne with just a few moves. They will fly lower over water and higher over land.

Buffleheads feed while diving in open shallow waters with submerged vegetation. Aquatic invertebrates, snails, small fish and seeds are on the forage menu, often swallowed while underwater.

To dive, buffleheads compress their feathers to squeeze out air, then plunge slightly forward and deeply under. With wings tight against their bodies, they propel forward with their feet. Dives last from 12 to 25 seconds before bobbing back to surface. Most of their days are spent diving, swimming, preening, and resting.

Deeper Dive

Buffleheads are awkward on land and in their nesting territories, often use cavities of flickers or pileated woodpeckers.
