Innsbrook Bluebird Report

The Innsbrook bluebirds presently have 71 active nests containing 33 eggs and 261 hungry chicks. Seventy-one chicks have fledged this past week - be on the lookout for them!

The bluebird eggs hatch over a period of a day or more and usually in the order in which they were laid. The young break out of their shells with the aid of an "egg-tooth," a hardening at the tip of their upper bills. Once they hatch, the egg tooth is reabsorbed.

If you find a piece of eggshell on the ground, you can tell if the chick hatched successfully if there is a partial straight line of broken shell at the largest diameter of the egg. If the shell is broken irregularly or just punctured, it is the result of predation. Once the eggs hatch, the mom will remove the eggshells or partially eat them, since they contain nutrients like calcium.

Please send your bluebird reports/questions to Shirley at saritsema@gmail.com.

There are also opportunities to put your gardening skills to use helping with volunteer gardening projects.

It's not too late to be a part of the fun! Annual membership dues are $25 per family. Contact membership chairs Mike and Sue Harmon at 314.761.8998 or 314.216.0116. Checks made out to VIGC can be sent to Mike Harmon | 1102 Charrette View Drive | Innsbrook, MO 63390.

NATURE NOTES

Buffleheads: Must See Nature

There's an old saying about taking to water like a duck. Buffleheads take that saying to the limit with rapid flight and stealthy dives. If you take yourself near open waters this time of year, you may be able to see the show. Some were recently seen at Founain Grove and Riverlands. These diving ducks have been around for eons and have classic black and white features. Both males and females have large heads that stick out with a white patch. Males sport metallic greens and purples around their head. This iridescence is easier to see outside of the high contrast sunshine in the middle of the day.

Flying and Diving

Unlike other diving ducks that run across the water to take flight, buffleheads can become airborne with just a few moves. They will fly lower over water and higher over land.

Buffleheads feed while diving in open shallow waters with submerged vegetation. Aquatic invertebrates, snails, small fish and seeds are on the forage menu, often swallowed while underwater.

To dive, buffleheads compress their feathers to squeeze out air, then plunge slightly forward and deeply under. With wings tight against their bodies, they propel forward with their feet. Dives last from 12 to 25 seconds before bobbing back to surface. Most of their days are spent diving, swimming, preening, and resting.

Deeper Dive

Buffleheads are awkward on land and in their nesting territories, often use cavities of flickers or pileated woodpeckers.
